RESEARCH INTERESTS

(1) Global change biology, macroecology, and macroevolution, (2) animal colouration and signalling, (3) intraspecific and ontogenetic trait variation.

I am an evolutionary ecologist interested in the origin, maintenance, and functioning of biological diversity spanning individual organism levels to large spatial scales. I employ experimental, theoretical, and broad-scale comparative approaches to (i) understand various eco-evolutionary processes that underlie macroevolutionary patterns such as biodiversity distribution patterns, and (ii) investigate how anthropogenic pressures and climate change are affecting these patterns and processes to inform global conservation. I am also (iii) interested in evolutionary ecological mechanisms pertaining to the functioning of diverse antipredator or signalling strategies involving colouration, with a particular focus on (iv) understanding the evolutionary forces that maintain variation through ontogeny and across individuals, such as colour polymorphisms.
